NEW QUESTION: 3

Which of the following types of redundancy permits software to run simultaneously on multiple geographically distributed locations, with voting on results?

A. Application

B. Data

C. Process

D. Hardware

Answer: C

Explanation:

The various types of redundancy are as follows:

Hardware redundancy: it includes the installation of multiple processors, mirrored disks, multiple server farms, and RAID5.

Process redundancy: It permits software to run simultaneously on multiple geographically distributed locations, with voting on results. It prevents attacks in which an attacker can get physical control of a machine, insert unauthorized software, and alter data.

Data redundancy: It allows the system to take backup on a permanent media at a regular time interval.

Application redundancy: It needs at least two machines that can work on the same application. Application redundancy is the best way to make system infrastructure resilient against problems.
